Decent Work and Poverty Reduction Strategies

“Together, our role in the international effort to eradicate poverty is to promote public policies, rights, social institutions and market solutions that permit people to earn a decent living, balance family needs and work out of poverty. But to do so, women and men need an enabling environment for empowerment.”

“Breaking the cycle of poverty is really about creating a new cycle of opportunity and local wealth creation. The Decent Work Agenda is an essential part of the solution. That Agenda may take different shapes and be built around different priorities in order to tackle different aspects of poverty and groups of poor people. But the promotion of rights, representation, employment and protection is always going to be the heart of successful policies to reduce poverty. In all these areas, we have knowledge and experience that are important for the global effort in which we are a full and willing partner.”

Decent Work and Poverty Reduction Strategies

Poverty reduction: at the core of the ILO mandate

The ILO's mandate on poverty reduction is written into its constitution...

"Poverty anywhere constitutes a danger to prosperity everywhere"

Declaration of Philadelphia, 1944

The ILO's work on poverty reduction is grounded in social justice and its twin concepts of entitlements and equity. The starting point is the fact that for poor people, work is the main and often only way to get and stay out of poverty. In addition, this approach advocates a right to inclusion and protection. Poor people's ability to access decent work depends on the entitlement relations in any given society. For a poor person, access to decent work depends on what she owns (often not a lot), what exchange possibilities are offered to her (often very few), what is given, and what is taken away. Poverty reduction is therefore about increasing the endowments of the poor and their entitlements. The achievement of these rights involves the development of both economic and social capabilities.

The ILO approach emphasises that economic growth is an essential but not sufficient condition for poverty reduction. Poverty reduction involves growth with a substantial reorientation in favour of the poor (often referred to as "pro-poor growth"). It includes an employment-centred development strategy, a comprehensive perspective of social safety nets and social transfers, changes in institutions, laws, regulations and practices that are part of the process that creates and perpetuates poverty. Through the years, the ILO has built up considerable knowledge and practical experience, for poverty-reducing strategies, both at the macro and micro levels.

The challenge of new PRSs:

Since 1999, an increasing number of countries are initiating national policy processes for the definition and adoption of poverty reduction strategies (PRSPs and PRSs)<sup>1</sup>. Currently, in more than 70 low income countries, PRS processes are underway.

Six main features differentiate PRSs from previous national plans and other planning instruments:

- 1 National ownership
- 2 Public consultation
- 3 Links to public expenditure
- 4 Links to development assistance
- 5 Prioritized public action
- 6 Monitoring of poverty

The early generation of PRSPs, presented three overarching challenges to the ILO:

- Need to include a more in-depth analysis of employment and other aspects of decent work giving rise to a more explicit role for decent work in poverty reduction strategies, including fundamental principles and rights at work and social protection.
- Labour ministries, employers' and workers' organizations need to be more systematically integrated into the participatory process underpinning the design and implementation of PRSPs. Without social dialogue, the participation and national ownership principles of the PRSP are seriously undermined and decent work strategies are unlikely to receive adequate consideration.
- More attention should be placed on equity in addition to growth in PRSPs. The policy implications related to redistribution need to be given more prominence, for example, through the development of a fair, efficient and effective fiscal policy and the promotion of the core labour standards.

<sup>1</sup> PRSPs refer to the World Bank/IMF endorsed national poverty reduction strategies which are in place in most Low Income Countries (LICs) and PRSs, to those that non LICs have chosen to implement that follow similar principles but are not designed necessarily to access concessional finance and/or debt relief. However, increasingly both terms are used interchangeably to refer to recent national poverty reduction strategies.

What is the objective of ILO engagement?

The overarching vision for the ILO's support to PRSs is to develop and promote coherent and integrated policy frameworks for connecting the poverty and decent work agenda(s) at the national level. This vision draws on all four strategic objectives of decent work, employment, rights, social protection and social dialogue, and is managed as an Office wide collaborative effort.<sup>2</sup> The strategy involves four interconnected elements:

- Empowering the constituents (ministries of labour, employers' and workers' organizations) by strengthening their capacity to influence the drafting, implementation and monitoring of national PRSs;
- Incorporating employment and other relevant dimensions of the decent work agenda into PRSs by identifying appropriate entry points and country-specific priorities and by articulating a visible and marketable platform for action;
- Influencing and developing partnerships through strategic communication at the country level: seeking to influence other government ministries and departments (especially ministries of finance/planning) in driving the design and implementation of PRSs, and development organizations (including multilaterals, bilaterals and civil society organizations) to embrace the decent work route out of poverty;
- Maintaining critical dialogue at the global and regional levels with the international financial institutions, regional commissions, regional development banks and UNDP on the overall assessment of the content and process of PRSs.

<sup>2</sup> This cross- Office collaboration and integrated support to country engagement in PRSs is facilitated by the Employment Policy Department.

Poverty reduction strategies are important for the ILO because...

- They are the national strategy for achieving the Millennium Development Goals (MDGs). Both the World Bank and the UN stress that integrating the MDGs into poverty reduction strategies is key to ensuring that the MDGs become central to national policy processes.
- They are closely linked to the prioritization of public policy actions and public expenditure frameworks. It is important that these social and economic policies are made with reference to decent work goals and that policy outcomes reflect decent work concerns.
- They are linked to development assistance from the World Bank and other multilateral and bilateral donors. Many donors align their funding and country programmes with PRSs through direct budget support and sector wide programmes, going away from a project-based approach. Producing a PRSP is also a prerequisite for debt relief from the Paris Club members under the enhanced Heavily Indebted Poor Countries (HIPC) Initiative. Twenty<sup>3</sup> out of the 40 eligible countries had by the end of 2006 reached HIPC completion point. These countries also benefited from the Multilateral Debt Relief Initiative (MDRI) agreed upon in 2006, which basically doubles the debt relief.
- The UNDAF – the common strategic framework for the operational activities of the United Nations system at the country level, is framed in the light of nationally-formulated PRSs and is becoming more and more aligned and harmonized with the national process.
- The ILO's Decent Work Country Programmes (DWCPs), which represent the distinct contribution to the above processes, have promoted strong articulation with PRSs at the country level (See Table I).

An opportunity to raise the profile of decent work and the ILO

A major difference between new PRS processes and past initiatives is the notion of national ownership based on broad participatory process and public accountability. This is consistent with a greater appreciation today of the need to strengthen the rule of law and democratic institutions and processes, taking into account fundamental rights to organize, enjoy freedom of association, be free of child labour and forced labour and to enjoy equal rights without discrimination on the basis of gender or other factors.

Consequently, social dialogue becomes a vital process in and of itself. At the country level great attention has been placed on building the capacity of Ministries of Labour, trade unions and employers' associations and strengthening tripartism more generally. It is evident that as the ILO constituents become increasingly involved in PRS activities, their profile and that of decent work is enhanced vis-à-vis others in the international development community. Dialogue with IFIs (principally the World Bank) and bilaterals, among others, are becoming more significant and productive. The PRS process, therefore, constitutes a vehicle through which the ILO, including the constituents, can influence national planning and budgeting.

How to engage in Poverty Reduction Strategies

The ILO has sought to engage in PRSs from many different angles but two broad approaches prevail: an integrated, longer-term and multidimensional approach or a more specific thematic, focused input. In general, the approach adopted will depend on the stage of a given country's PRS cycle and the interest and capacity of constituents and the Office to participate in and add value to what is often a long and multi-staged process.

Participating in PRSs is about engaging in an on-going policy dialogue, supporting the capacities of constituents to articulate their views and concerns, opening up policy dialogues to employment and labour market issues and for considering alternative policy options. Areas where the ILO can add value include:

- Ensuring the poverty diagnostic in PRSs integrates the employment dimension, especially as it affects, for example, women, indigenous peoples, migrants, the disabled, informal economy and rural workers, all of whom are likely to experience poverty in distinct ways.
- Ensuring that decent work goals are included in strategies (macro, sector-based and at the community level) and that decent work targets are included in monitoring and evaluation processes.
- Ensuring that rights issues, especially respect of the core labour standards and equity issues, including good governance in the labour market, are properly addressed in PRSs.

By 2007 the ILO was providing support to PRSs in more than 35 countries in all regions. The countries are in different stages in the PRS and debt relief process. Table I gives a snapshot of multiple entry points from a decent work perspective in selected countries, constituent's participation in the process and the articulation with the DWCPs.

The PRSP Advisory Committee

An ILO PRSP Advisory Committee established in October 2002 provides a forum for exchange of ideas and experiences amongst staff and across the strategic objectives of decent work. Its goal is to foster a coherent ILO approach for engaging effectively with the PRS process. The Committee meets regularly to discuss various aspects for connecting decent work goals with PRSs and PRSPs and country experiences. The Committee examined the findings of an independent evaluation of ILO's engagement with the PRS process undertaken in 2005 and follows-on its recommendations.

Examples of successful engagement by the ILO in PRSs

The ILO has provided substantial and well received inputs into the long-running PRS process in INDONESIA. In addition to capacity building for constituents, the ILO's support towards the poverty reduction strategy process centred on providing substantial technical contributions to the PRS drafting process, in the form of a series of twelve technical briefing notes and a comprehensive report entitled Working out of Poverty: An ILO submission for the Indonesia PRSP which provided specific policy recommendations for the Government. The short and focused technical briefing notes – on topics like employment dimensions of macro and sectoral policies; youth employment: pathways from school to work; promoting good governance in the labour market and; addressing gender issues in poverty reduction - served two key purposes: as background documents, on issues and policy choices critical to poverty reduction and as building blocks towards the comprehensive ILO report.

The ILO Office in Jakarta has been actively involved in awareness raising and promoting decent work as a component of poverty reduction via an active PRSP communication strategy. This has been based on the technical briefing notes and full report but has also included publishing various brochures, posters, a PRS diary and even the launch of a commemorative stamp under the banner “ILO Supports Indonesia to Tackle Poverty”.

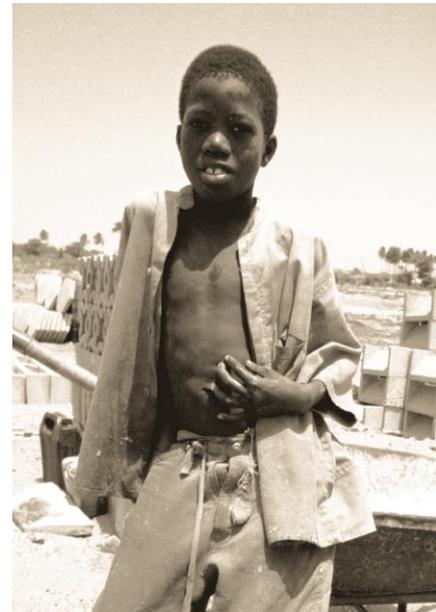

The Office has engaged on a regular basis with donors and under the auspices of the UN country team on decent work issues and poverty reduction. A good working relationship has been established with the World Bank Office in Indonesia, which, following the ILO lead has subsequently published a set of policy briefs, two of which are specifically on the subject of job creation.

Through its involvement in the PRS process, the ILO has also built up a sound working relationship with the Planning Ministry (BAPPENAS) and was actively involved in providing technical support to the formulation of the new mid-term/five-year national development plan. The ILO's active involvement in the PRS process provided an important foundation for the Office's contribution to the Government's Master Plan for Post Tsunami Reconstruction. The final draft of the PRS adopted a pronounced rights-based approach and included a chapter on the right to employment. In this regard, it can be assumed that the technical inputs and advocacy agenda adopted by the ILO has had a significant impact. The PRS has subsequently been integrated into the new mid-term/five-year national development plan. In sum, the visibility of the ILO has been enhanced enormously through its engagement in the PRS process and the ILO now has a hitherto unprecedented profile vis-à-vis other development organizations in Indonesia as well as with the Planning Ministry.

The work in Indonesia is also a good example of where work on the PRS process has fostered more and better working relations both between constituents and within constituent groups. For example, different trade union federations came together to form a task force around the subject of poverty reduction with the objective of submitting a joint trade union input to the PRS process. Having achieved this outcome, the task force has continued to function as a trade union policy network thereby fostering closer working relations between trade union bodies and helping ensure that there is a coordinated approach to policy dialogues with Government and the International Financial Institutions.

Since 2002, the ILO has been engaged with the GHANA Poverty Reduction Strategy (GPRS) process then part of its Ghana Decent Work Pilot Programme (DWPP). The support to the constituents in order to ensure that the many issues related to employment and labour are better addressed has been successful. The constituents have been engaged with the revision of the GPRS on the basis of a tripartite consensus. The consolidated draft of the GRPS 2006-2009 includes more and better jobs as an explicit goal, supported by specific programmes and funding. In seeking to influence the GPRS revision process, the constituents drew on analysis and policy development they participated in as part of the DWPP. An example is the work undertaken by the Ghana Employers' Association and the Trade Union Congress on increasing productivity and distributing the benefits through wages and work related income as a key factor for effective poverty reduction. Workers and employers decided to work together on identifying options for productivity improvements at the firm, sectoral and national levels and sought to link this with an appropriate wages and incomes policy. They carried out two complementary studies and discussed the findings at a tripartite forum where they agreed a set of contributions to the GPRS revision. In a similar fashion, inputs into the revised GPRS were derived on skills development and youth employment, labour-based public works programmes, small enterprise promotion, the inclusion of persons with disabilities and local economic development.

A very encouraging sign that the message is taking hold is the fact that the President declared improvements in the informal economy a priority for his second term in office in January 2005. This is the central goal originally set by the constituents for the DWPP in 2002. A policy instrument for pro-poor growth focusing on upgrading the informal economy through the concept of decent work has already been designed and tested in two pilot districts in Ghana and discussions are underway to upscale the pilot scheme to a much larger number of districts.

The Government of MALI decided to make the PRSP the unique framework for its mid-term policies and strategies as well as for engagement with technical and financial partners. The ILO acted speedily and strategically to influence the new programming framework through the Decent Work Agenda. Mali was one of the five countries participating in the pilot ILO/DFID/WB project in support of PRSPs initiated in 2001.

ILO's engagement was welcome and certainly helped by its longstanding presence through technical cooperation programmes, especially in the field of employment and its solid relations with the national partners. One of the thematic working groups set up under the PRSP focused on "decent work". Following two years of intensive efforts, the inter-sectoral nature of employment and the important consultative role of employers' and workers' organizations could be effectively promoted in the PRS framework. Moreover, through this process and with the support of the ILO, the Malian authorities made youth employment one of the central priorities of government policies.

In turn, the ILO committed to align its own interventions to the national priorities retained in the Mali PRSP. The entry-point of youth employment allowed for the development of an integrated approach centered on multi-dimensional employment promotion programmes, combining interventions in the areas of micro-enterprise and microfinance, cooperative development, employment-intensive methods, skills development and employability, as well as mutual health insurance.

Tangible results have not only been achieved on the strategic and operational fronts but more interestingly with respect to resource mobilization. The ILO was able to secure government funding for two national programmes through the resources released following the HIPC debt relief in 2003. The first is the National Employment Action Programme for Poverty Reduction (PNA/ERP), focusing on youth employment, fully funded by the Mali Government to the tune of US$ 4,373,000. A technical assistance component executed by the ILO is funded through UNDP for US$ 256,000. The second is the Multi-sectoral programme on labour-intensive investment in rural and urban areas, also targeting youth, financed by the Government to the tune of US$ 2.3 million. The corresponding technical assistance component executed by the ILO is funded bilaterally by the Government of Luxembourg, in the amount of US$ 1,500,000. In this process the ILO is currently working with constituents to enhance and scale-up coherent and integrated action on youth employment, which includes the preparation of a dedicated national action plan.

The two programmes are direct and concrete outcomes of the longstanding and continuous engagement of ILO with national partners, and the integration of the employment dimension in the Mali PRSP. The commitments of the Ouagadougou Summit further motivated the Government to place decent work at the heart of its poverty reduction strategy and the two programmes above are to be seen as concrete follow-up to those commitments.

Building the capacities of ILO, constituents and staff, for connecting decent work and PRSs is a priority of ILO action. Table II gives a list of selected tools for capacity-building developed in different parts of the Office. Table III gives examples of capacity-building initiatives.
