Strategies for the Extension of Social Protection

Turin, Italy, 26 November – 7 December 2007

CONTEXT

Globally it is estimated that only one in five people in the world has adequate social security coverage. The lack of social protection is largely concentrated in the informal economy, where women are more likely to be working.

Extending social protection coverage to excluded populations is one of the priorities of the ILO in the framework of its global strategy aimed at ensuring that all people - both men and women - have decent work. Workers need protection against the risk of loss of income because of incapacity for work. This may be for short periods of unemployment or sickness or maternity or for a longer time due to invalidity or employment injury. Employers and enterprises need social security for a productive workforce. Pensioners need income security for a satisfactory and fulfilling retirement. Society needs social security for stable labour relations. Social security helps create a positive attitude towards structural and technical change as well as to the challenges of globalization and its potential benefits

In 2001, representatives from governments, workers' and employers' organizations, meeting at the International Labour Conference, reached a new consensus on social security. They agreed that the highest priority would be given to "policies and initiatives, which can bring social protection to those who are not covered by existing systems."

Accordingly, the Conference directed by the ILO to launch the Global Campaign on Social Security and Coverage for All. New strategies for the extension of traditional social protection mechanisms and the development of decentralized systems are becoming necessary. The ILO promotes the design of linkages and bridges between decentralized systems and other forms of social protection and public initiatives.

In this context, the ITC ILO Turin is organizing this training activity to strengthen the capacity of key actors and stakeholders to more effectively extend social protection benefits to workers in the informal economy. Special attention is needed for gender sensitive approaches in order to take into account the needs and the development opportunities of all.

OBJECTIVES

The main objective of this interregional training course is to strengthen the capacity of planners and social actors to develop tripartite strategies for the extension of social protection. At the end of the training, the participants will have increased knowledge and skills that will enable them:

- To have an improved understanding of the need for social protection taking into account a gender perspective;
- To understand the different statutory and decentralized systems and tools for the extension of social protection;
- To identify possible facilitating and hindering factors that may influence the design, setting-up and implementation of gender sensitive social protection mechanisms for informal economy groups;
- To develop an international perspective on the extension of social protection coverage through comparative analysis and sharing experiences; and
- To contribute to the future development of the extension of social protection through active involvement in a network for exchange of information and sharing of experiences.

PARTICIPANT'S PROFILE

This training course is designed for:

- Policy planners from relevant governmental structures,
- Leaders and key members of informal economy, community-based, women-specific or non-governmental organizations who are engaged in various development activities for the benefit of their members;
- Planners, advisers and professionals dealing with social security and social protection mechanisms;
- Representatives of workers and employers' organizations involved in the extension of social protection;
- Practitioners and consultants of international development agencies who wish to gain new technical expertise related to their interventions in the area of social protection.

PROGRAM

The training program will focus on the following topics:

- The situation and perspectives of women and men workers in the informal economy and their increasing need for social protection;
- Extension of formal social protection mechanisms: social insurance, universal benefits and social assistance schemes;
- The promotion of and support for the development of decentralized systems deriving from local initiatives, in particular micro-insurance;
- The design of linkages between decentralized systems and other forms of social protection and public initiatives;
- A gender sensitive approach to the extension of social protection.
- The role of the government, social partners and NGO in the extension of social protection.

METHODOLOGY

The training activity is organized in collaboration with the ILO Global Campaign on Social security and Coverage for all. The training activity will be organized on a participatory basis to encourage active involvement, and the exchange of views and experiences among the participants. Particular attention will be paid to the presentation of best practices through case studies reflecting experiences already gained locally and internationally. The gender dimension is highlighted throughout the entire program.
